Present law provides that if the combined adjusted gross income of the parties is less than the lowest sum shown on the child support guideline schedule, the court shall determine an amount of child support based on the facts of the case.

Present law prohibits a court from setting an award of child support less than $100.00 except in cases of shared or split custody, or when the obligor has a medically documented disability that limits his ability to meet the mandatory minimum.

Proposed law repeals present law.

Effective January 1, 2023.
