

Existing law (C.C. Art. 112) authorizes the court to award final spousal support and provides certain factors to consider in determining the amount and duration, including financial obligations of the parties.

New law retains existing law and provides that financial obligations include any interim allowance or final child support obligation.

Existing law (C.C. Art. 113) authorizes the court to award interim spousal support when a demand for final spousal support is pending and provides factors to consider.

New law retains existing law and adds any interim allowance or final child support obligations as factors to consider in awarding interim spousal support.

Effective Aug. 1, 2014.

(Amends C.C. Arts. 112(B)(2) and 113)
